Logistics as a service differentiator is a competitive edge that chemical companies should take advantage of

DHL Whitepaper

China and India, among other emerging countries, have become new chemical production zones.

Distributing to emerging markets is the future for large chemical clusters thanks to the stabilization of developed countries.

The multispecialty chemical industry needs to design supply chains that meet customers' needs (shifting from "product sellers" to "solution providers") and reduce distribution costs.

That is why an increasing number of companies are looking for a hub for the products of a given region or for a place to set up regional distribution centres.

Excellent location

A gateway to European/Mediterranean chemical markets and easy access to Latin America

Barcelona offers a great location in terms of production and emerging distribution markets of chemical products

It concentrates an industrial knowledge of the sector, chemical partners & commercial networks and innovative activities

Catalonia (including Barcelona and Tarragona) is home to the largest chemicals hub in Southern Europe and Mediterranean.

Barcelona has strong commercial networks in the area and is physically & culturally close to destination countries in this region.

Research and academic institutions (ICIQ, CTQC, CEIS-URV, Universities of Barcelona and Tarragona) and international events (Expoquimia, Equiplast, Eurosfas) ensure that Catalonia is on the cutting edge of the future of chemistry.

5th chemical pole in Europe, accounting for over 43% of Spain's chemicals turnover.

More than 200 international chemical companies, such as BASF, DOW, KAO, Covestro, Lyondellbasell, Elix Polymers, Air Products, Clariant, Henkel, Unilever, operate in the region. It is easy to find an industrial and commercial partner.

A market of 500 million consumers less than 48h away
